Concept Question 2-1: Why does scaling time in an impulse also scale its area?

A good way to think of an impulse is as a rectangular pulse of infinite height, zero width, and area of 1. Scaling time scales the width, but does not affect the height, so it scales the area. See Section 2-1.1-C.