

Concept Question 9-10: How can a Markov random field model be useful?

It states that the value of a given pixel is likely to be close to the values of its surrounding pixels. Then all of the pixels are likely to be classified as being in the same class, instead of being classified into different classes.