

Concept Question 1-4: Why is an IR imager called a thermal imager?

An IR (InfraRed) imager measures the blackbody radiation emitted by each pixel in the scene, which is proportional to the emissivity of the material in that pixel and strongly dependent on the temperature. Hence the term “thermal.”